

Man's life, like a weaver's shuttle flies,
 Or, like a tender flower, fades and dies;
 Or, like a race, it ends without delay,
 Or like a vapor, vanishes away,
 Or like a candle, it each moment melts,
 Or like a vessel, under sail it hastens;
 Or like the Post, it gallops never past,
 Or like the Shadow of a cloud, it's past,
 Our castles are but mounds, and strong the pole,
 Our towers, but short, our death is certain to;
 But, as this warning is a secret still,
 Let us be ready, come death when he will.
